

Conflict and resolution are two common themes in literature. For conflict, a typical form is the confrontation between individuals and society. Resolution is even more varied. It can be terminal, but also unfinished or even nonexistent. In "The Crucible" by Arthur Miller, the author illustrated mass hysteria, ^{Titles of Plays in " "} which individuals accused and hanged others ^{in excuse of} on the pretense of an absurd witch hunt. In Human Acts ^{underline novels} by Han Kang, the author applied post-modernism fragmented narrative to present the trauma and healing after the Guangju Massacre in 1980. Both texts explore the conflict ^{against authoritarian control} between the individual and society, but while Miller presents this conflict as a public and verbal struggle resolved through ^{? what do you mean? let me let me} terminal moral sacrifice, Han Kang portrays it as a bodily and psychological trauma that resists closure, suggesting that political violence under authoritarian control cannot be resolved through a single decisive act.

Both ~~test~~ texts explored the conflict between individual and society. In "The Crucible," Miller ~~especially created~~ rendered mass hysteria and demonstrated how it could be exploited to bypass social laws ~~and~~ for personal interest. ~~By applying dramatic diction,~~ For example, when Mary Warren wanted to accuse John Proctor, ^{though} lack ^{ed} of evidence, she ^{demonized/villified or defamed} monstrified Proctor's image. "His eyes were like coals, his finger claw my neck..." The simile of eyes to coal ^{uses} a dramatic imagery ^{to} that pictures Proctor's eyes as extreme darkness, giving readers sensory shock and feel the "evilness" directly. The imagery of "claw neck" ^{is} ~~was~~ tactile. Paired with previous simile, ~~it~~ ~~po~~ ~~Marry~~ Warren's words convey a strong sense of horror and portrays Proctor as a demon. ~~without~~ By ~~monstrification~~, Warren hoped to justify ^{that} she was not a witch by accusing ^{him} others.

~~the~~ Her ~~reformation~~ accusation's reliance on objective sensation rather than evidence ~~do~~ implies that

collective fear can replace rational judgment of individuals on conflict under mass hysteria. ~~It~~ Furthermore Miller applied ³ dramatic [✓] irony to ~~furth~~ further amplify the absurdity. During a witch hunt trial, the girls deliberately mimicked Mary Warren's words and actions to act as if they were controlled by

Warren's devil. ^{to force Warren's confession} ~~They~~ The ~~parallel~~ parallel movements of the girls was ~~perceived~~ ^{perceived as} real and ^{to further the conflict?}

horrified ~~the~~ other ~~presenting~~ characters to push the plot. ~~Their~~ Miller's stage direction ^{created} rendered a seemingly ^{ingly} terrible atmosphere, ~~despite~~ although the readers ^{are aware of the ruse and} know the non-existence of devil or ^{Abigail} ~~the~~ unnatural power. Through this irony, the readers can understand how absurdity can ~~push~~ drive the girls to this point.

✓ conflicts ~~is~~ ~~just like~~ and ~~are~~ find ~~par~~ parallel to the reality of how McCarthyism is ^{an allegorical} ~~acting~~ ^{rather} ~~between~~ people

~~was~~ used ~~to~~ sensationalism to accuse and manipulate conflict. Therefore, through the use of dramatic imagery and irony, # Miller presented how individuals ~~are~~ exploited mass hysteria and conflict for their own benefit.

Although showing the same theme of ~~how~~ ^{the} individuals' ~~act~~ ^{role} in societal conflict, ~~the~~ Human

Acts focused ^{on direct} ~~directly on~~ brutality, showing personal trauma caused by systematic oppression.

The author applied juxtaposition in "The Factory Girl", where ^{protesting} naked, teenage ^{female} ~~girls~~ workers were attacked by armed men with "helmet and clubs". The nudity ~~was~~ symbolized virginity and the fragility of women, ~~the most~~ but they were cruelly stamped on. The ^{imagery?} detail ~~of~~ of helmets and clubs further illustrate the strength of oppression ~~and~~. This leaves the readers to ~~reimagine~~ conflicts, where it takes ^{the most barbaric} ~~the~~ form: the ~~strongest~~ strong bullying of social darwinism the weakest, people who deserve protection. ~~Further~~ In addition, personal trauma was presented explicitly: "Wooden ruler thrust into vagina". ~~This detail demonstrate~~ This was the torture faced by the factory girl after protest. ^{the} ~~by the military~~. This ~~detail~~ ^{traumatic} piece of memory demonstrates how ordinary object ^{"the ruler"} can become extreme ^{tool of} torture and humiliated ^{ion}. ~~The~~ The use of ordinary ^{authoritat} object ^s also simulates ~~the~~ the activation of trauma in daily life, where "a ruler" can invoke ^{let readers} strong ~~can~~ pain. Vagina ^{is one of the} ~~is~~ ^{one of the} symbols of women. Its ~~was~~ torture was symbolic of the oppression on the fragile civilian and the ^{and symbolic} psychological trauma it bears. ~~Despite~~

~~In addition~~ ^{Further from} ~~After~~ ^{Beyond causing} activation of trauma, the ^{seen in} ~~girl~~ even "despised her own body". This illustrated how the conflict and oppression can lead to false conception of one's self, where the body becomes the trauma itself. Therefore, the authoritarian violence ^{causes creates} ~~is~~ ^{or} ~~social~~ conflict between

~~to~~ ~~not~~ ~~see~~ society and individual ~~and~~, which ^{causes} ~~poses~~ both physical and mental trauma.

To compare and contrast ~~the~~ the two texts, the conflicts ~~had~~ have different nature. The ~~Crucible~~ ^{viewed} ~~presented~~ conflict as ^{externalized} ~~externalized~~ accusation and mass hysteria, ~~but~~ while ^{absurd}

Human Acts focused on the internalized trauma. This difference implies that conflict in ^{the play} ~~C~~ is socially performative, but ~~the one in it~~ ^{whereas in the novel} was mental and bodily remembered. In addition,

~~the~~ ~~presentation~~ ^{the} ~~of conflict~~ ^{diverges} ~~the~~ ^{the play} ~~C~~ presents conflicts more verbally, mirroring

the fearful community created by McCarthyism. ~~Differently~~, ^{However, the novel} ~~Differently~~, ~~it~~ ^{used} more imagery and tactile ~~illustrations~~ details to show the conflict's nature as authoritarian assertion over body.

Apart from ~~the~~ conflict, two texts illustrate resolution as ^{Rephrase} endings differently. ^{"The} Crucible ["] used ^{death} ~~Proctor's~~ death as the ending to protect his own reputation as a ^{final} terminal resolution.

Proctor refused to sign his name ^{to a} ~~for~~ false confession. He shouted "It is my name!" In this plot, "name" is repeated ^{as a symbol of one's reputation and good standing in a community}, where the author dramatized and ~~emphasized~~ ^{important} how ~~name~~ ^{is} the "name" means to Proctor, and his determination to defend it, even if the only way was death.

The stage direction further amplified this effect. ^{through the auditory imagery of} "cry with whole soul" ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~auditory~~ ^{imagery}, where "cry" indicates ^{Proctor's} desperation. ~~and "soul" shows the tones~~ "Whole soul" ^{is} ~~was~~ symbolic, as it ~~can contrast~~ shows the ~~the~~ real voice of Proctor, contrasting sharply with others' dishonest confession^s and accusation^s. This contrast thus ^{further illustrates} ~~showcases~~ the struggle of Proctor to choose between a reputable death or a guilty life. The "soul" and "name" are allusions^s to Christianity, where signing one's name to ^{lie?} Satan means selling one's soul. This allusion ~~implies~~ ^{elevates} the theme to a religious height, ^{to Satan?} suggesting how individuals like Proctor holds his faith against societal ^{conflict's pressure} ~~pressure~~, even ^{the} consequence is death. Therefore, in "Crucible", personal integrity can still survive within a corrupt/hysterical^{cal} system, and that individual's courage or faith can offer a form of resolution even when the larger community fails. Good summation.

^{Contrastingly} Differently, ~~the~~ Human Acts ~~is applied~~ ^s showcased a more diversified resolution through multiple character's^s narrative^s and their unique endings. The author employed post-modernism fragmented narrative, allowing open interpretation and present^{ing} complexity via different character's lens. For example, ~~is~~ Dong Ho's mother ~~chapter~~, transformed from a victim (losing her son) into an advocate, ~~against~~ ^{dictator of} accusing the sins of authoritarian violence. ^{Lead into quote. & when she states,} ~~The author~~ "I (mother), jumped down, dashed over to the desk, scrambled up ... pulled it [murderer photo] down and smashed ..." The rapid verbs form a lexical field, ~~where~~ ^{conveying} her extreme fury and action of biological instinct. ^s It contrasted sharply with the deep sorrow her strong maternal instinct to avenge her son's wrongful murder from earlier plot in the same chapter, which ^{illustrates how} ~~indicated~~ ^{how the} the mother ^{now} turned the outer pressure ~~into power~~ and internal pain ~~into~~ physical action. The confrontation was externalized and came ~~into~~ a breaking point, where individuals actively seek resolution ~~is~~ ~~not~~ not from ^{what do you mean?} ~~memory~~, but from ^{through} individual advocacy. However, the confrontation has its duality ^{as seen}

ⁱⁿ ~~in~~ smashed glass ... "something splattered across my face - tears, or maybe blood". ^{Here} The author intentionally presented ^s the ambiguity of "something". "Tears" ^{are} were the reaction of strong resentment, while "blood" symbolizes ~~the~~ both physical and mental pain ~~is~~ inflicted by the confronted force.

This ambiguity implies duality of human ^{nature}: fragile while determined. It shows the ~~the~~ individual's resolution ^{is} ~~was~~ not always ~~the~~ a good ending, but ~~is~~ sometimes a trade off with ^a price, similar to ^{the} Crucible's Proctor taking ~~price~~ death as price to resolution. ^{In contrast} Another narrative in ^{Human Acts} ~~H~~ viewed resolution as silence and bearing witness. ^{the} ~~the~~ In ^{the} factory girl: "You ^{the narrator indicates that} ~~you~~ slide both your hands beneath the straps of backpack (the tapes from witness), Like a child you're carrying on your back." ^{Here}, ^s the simile of ~~back~~ backpack to baby ~~referred~~ referred the backpack (the tapes/witness)'s weight to weight of a newborn, innocent life, ~~their~~ ~~the~~ ~~the~~ which suggested the carrier's sustained act of care. ~~The author~~ The implication is clear: memory and witness are not static, but are meanings that grow. The author did not judge ~~whether~~ whether the act of remaining silence⁺ was right or wrong. This intentional ~~ambiguity~~ ^{lack of} disclarity and also the duality mentioned or lack of a unified resolution thus indicate that political brutality cannot simply be resolved through a single act or decision, but through ^{an} ~~acts~~ individual's unique effort.

The factory girl thus chose to remember the memory, with pain, for ^{resolution}.

Both ~~texts~~ texts explored the duality and the price to ^{pay for} take in resolution. "The Crucible" showed death as a price for salvation, while Human Acts ^{reflects} as the ~~an~~ unfinished trauma. However, Human Acts presented ^s ~~this~~ more of complexity, ~~and~~ showcasing the ~~real~~ collective nature of resolution in a mass conflict, rather than personal sacrifice or heroic action in "The Crucible". Furthermore, ~~The~~ ^{"The} Crucible" framed resolution as terminal through moral closure via catharsis, but Human Act implies the conflict is often unresolved, ongoing, and ^{multiple} plural.

To conclude, the ~~Crucible~~ Crucible and Human Acts both ~~explored~~ presented individual's resolution in a societal ~~conflict~~ ^{conflict}. Their difference ~~was~~ ~~mainly~~ ~~the~~ ~~play~~ mainly ~~the~~ nature of conflict: authoritarian control in ^{the novel} ~~it~~ and ~~the~~ mass hysteria with absurdity in ^{the play} ~~E. A.~~ ~~less~~ decisive ^{resolution} ~~terminal~~ ~~resolution~~ was provided by "The Crucible", but Human Acts suggested the complex resolutions ^{under} ~~a~~ vast historical background. In literature, ~~the~~ the theme of conflict and resolution in contexts of mass hysteria and authoritarian ~~the~~ violence shifts from restoring social order or providing the "right" solution, ~~to~~ where resolution ^{to preserve moral truth}.

is allowed to take a contradictory or ambiguous form. The individual's unique and indirect trajectory to seek resolution would mean facing contradiction and allowing them to exist, despite unresolved social consequences.

This is a noble effort; however, this pairing (of texts) is challenging. The focus ^{on the question} is maintained, but the topic sentences/main points need more precision. However, the summation in your body paragraphs is effective. The comparison/contrast is present as is the analysis of the authorial choices, but the expression/flow of your ideas could be clearer. Please review the annotations and consider pairing one of these texts with the graphic novel we will read in Jan-Feb. Also remember to analyze literature in present tense and lead into the quotes consistently.

different resolution presentation

1. C: Death as an ending to protect reputation, ^{terminal} ~~contestable~~ resolution

- "It is my name!" cry with whole soul p133: repetition of "name" -> emphasize the importance of name; allusion to religion, where signing name=give soul
- repeated interruption: the determination even know the consequence of hanging -> use death as resolution to blackened name
- personal integrity can still survive within a corrupt system, and that individual courage can offer a form of resolution even when the larger community fails

2. H: Multiple ending as diversified resolution

- post-modernism fragmented narrative: open interpretation and present complexity via different endings:
 - Dong Ho's mother(fight back as advocate)
 - "I jumped down, dashed over to the desk opposite, and scrambled up ... pulled it[murderer photo] down and smashed the glass with my foot. Something splattered across my face—tears, or maybe blood."
 - rapid verbs and imagery, ambiguity/duality/price of confrontation
 - Factory girl(remain silent and bear witness)
 - "You slide both hands beneath the straps of the backpack, ... [the tapes from witness] Like a child you're carrying on your back. So perhaps your hands are supporting, comforting, the backpack a baby's sling."
 - baby metaphor, sustained act of care
- political brutality cannot simply be resolved through a single act or decision

3. Comparison

- Individual sacrifice vs. collective response (H: collective memory rather than personal action)
- C: moral closure through sacrifice(catharsis) vs. H: unresolved, ongoing, plural (to the future)

Both texts explore the conflict between the individual and society, but while Arthur Miller presents this conflict as a public and verbal struggle resolved through terminal moral sacrifice, Han Kang portrays it as a bodily and psychological trauma that resists closure, suggesting that political violence under authoritarian control cannot be resolved through a single decisive act.

conflict of individual vs society

1. Crucible on mass hysteria and how it could be exploited

- monstrification: " He wake me every night, his eyes were like coals and his fingers claw my neck, and I sign, I sign".imagery, visual and tactile; reliance on objective sensation rather than evidence, collective fear replaces rational judgment
- absurdity+dramatic irony: girls mimicking Mary Warren p107: dramatic stage direction to render horrified atmosphere, although the readers know
- how conflict/hysteria could be exploited to control people

2. Human Act on direct brutality (The Factory Girl) systematic + personal

- juxtaposition of naked teenage girls and armed men with " helmet and clubs" -> bully from the strong to the weakest
- humiliation as a woman " wooden ruler thrust into vagina how ordinary object can become extreme torture, and how the most important organ was trampled ; " dispise self's body, trauma aftermath
- authoritarian violence's physical form causes both physical and mental trauma

3. comparison

- C: externalized accusation vs H: internalized trauma -> socially performative vs mental and bodily remembered
- C: more verbal(fearful community McCarthyism) vs H: imagery and tactile (authoritarian assertion over body)
